"Four-Point-Seven," said Jock to a comrade at the end of the first march, "is a useful creature, but a big, unwillin' hosp. What I want to know is why Four-Point-Seven? Why not maxims or positions or mountain guns somethin' you can bring with you if you want 'em; eh. Harry?"

"Bring 'em away from heathen Chinee," exclaimed the committee. "Never! There's no turnin' back on this lourney.

Lieut haut Reeder was among the wounded. He had been shot through both angles and could not walk. Joek and Harry were among the sick and could scarcely crawl. They watched with languid interest while the ad miral's order that the gun should be destroyed and the ammunition buried was given. At the same time the sick and wounded were placed on the ground near Pour Point-Seven

"Goodby, sir." answered Reeder. He raised himself a little as he spoke. but, exhausted with the effort, he sank back. It seemed long before the lieutenant heard a sound of any sort. Then he raised his head and looked sharply across the country before him, for he heard the sound of distant marching. But nothing met his gaze. His head

Jock and Harry heard the noise also. "Is it to be a case of tryin' to run for it after all," asked Harry, "or squattin' 'ere till they come on?"

"Wait for 'em," sald Jock grimly "But we shan't wait long. It'll soon be ever when they see us, an' they can't miss. They're walkin' straight on top of us."

"I've told you, men," said Reeder sternly, whose sharp ears had caught the sounds, "that I won't have you either talking or moving. Put your rifles down and shut your mouths. If this move fails then blaze away as hard as you please, only, in mercy's sake, give me a shot first and keep a couple for yourselves. That 'll be better shift than ever you'll get from devils like these."

They raised their heads a little, but even yet did not see what the lieutenant's purpose was. "Jock," said Reeder, after a pause.

"Sir." answered the seaman. "Can you climb on to your pins for two minutes? Help's coming. I'm sure of that. The admiral was pretty certain or he wouldn't have gone and left as here. Can you lend a hand?

You're about the only one left among us that can stand.' Jock forced himself into a sitting position. Without saying a word he struggled to his feet, stood on them for a full second and sank to the ground. He gave a short, hard laugh. "You've seen that exhibition, sir. What do you think?"

"Why," answered Reeder stoutly, "I think you can, my lad. Jock, you've got to.

"Put it as an order, sir," said Jock. with a strange light in his eyes. "Can you stand an' walk yourself at all?" "I can crawl a bit," said the lieuten-

the strength comin' back to my bones es if I'd had a nip of grog." "Lug me up to the gun," ordered Reeder. The men bent down and took an arm each. They helped but feebly, yet the lieutenant got over the ground toward the weapon. Four-Point-Seven had stopped sinking and was now lying forlornly on one side with the muzzle and the breech near the ground, so near that men could load her while on their knees. To any one approaching over the primitive road the gun and the sick and wounded were alike invisible a thousand yards away.

"Prop me up here against this stone." continued the lieutenant, "and be smart about it, my lads." He smiled as he gave the order.

"That's the ticket, sir." exclaimed Harry, with a grin. "It's as good as a pantymime."

"It makes a first rate chair, sir-the stone for a back an' the soft earth for a sent," commented Jock when they had helped t'4. Heutenant to a sitting "I've have to " and helper," said posture. "If you'd like an armehair I can act to a scuple of stones to put Jock and Harry, exhausted with their labors, did as they were ordered. The lieutenant crawled from his stone support and stretched himself upon his back near the gun, the lanyard of which he held.

"If they de come past us," he murmured, "we shall be ready to receive 'em. He raised han-off on his obser and bested. The solution came on, solulresistless, it seemed, straight for the spot where Four Point Seven and the remnant of her crew were hidden. It was like a wall advancing. Banners were waving, and the men were crying

Those who were first among them kept stopping to examine the road, in which the footmarks of the retreating force were clearly seen. They came on like a huge pack of bounds keen on the scent and having the quarry almost visible.

The mass came nearer. Reeder saw that the entire column was in the di rect line of fire of Four-Point-Seven. that a shot or shell must bore a lane down the very middle of the mass and that a bursting shell must devastate the forces. He fell flat on his face and pulled the lanyard.

There were a crash and a hiss from Four-Point-Seven. At the same instant there were appalling cries and another crash, the sound of the burst-Reeder. Jock and every sailor who could move rose up to mark what Four-Point-Seven had done.

"They run, they run," cried Reeder. "It's doubled 'em up! They didn't expect it, and they're demoralized."

"If we could only get another in," said Harry longingly. "But we can't," Jock answered

"There's no more ammunition. Besides, look at the gun." The lieutenant looked and saw that Four-Point-Seven had been driven by the recoil deep into the earth. "Not all the men here, sir, could get her out of that," added Jock, "even if they could stand on their legs. But what is that?"

Reeder turned slowly and looked to the rear. He saw men-men with white hats and helinets hurrying over the ground. "They're our own people!" he exclaimed. "It's our own people reenforced and coming back for us. Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah!" he cried, waving his hand. The effort was too much for him and he fainted.

When he came round he saw that a marine artillery officer from his own ship was bending over him, offering him liquid from his water bottle.

"You murdering young man," said the gunner in deep admiration. "They'll have to call you the 'plow' in future. Why, you pretty well wiped a regiment out with that shot."

"Good old Four-Point-Seven!" said Reeder. "I always knew she'd do us well. She'll be a credit to us all for long enough yet if we can only get her out of the mud." "You are wrong there," said the gunner. "She'll talk no more. She can't possibly be got away from here, so as soon as we're all clear of this spot she'll be blown up. Here comes the stretcher chaps for you-you have the honor to be the last to go."

A couple of marines got the lieutenant upon a stretcher and marched off with him. When they were some hundred yards away they halted. Reeder turned and looked. Jock, from a neighboring stretcher, looked too.

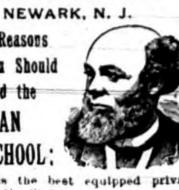

They saw a cloud of smoke in which were dark fragments. Then they heard the crash of an explosion. A very small fragment of steel fell near the lieutenant's right hand. He picked it up. "A bit of a gun," he muttered, "I'll keep it till the end of my days to remind me of what saved my life. Good old Four-Jock sighed regretfully. "I always said the gun was all right if you could only get the other side to walk up an' give her a chance. They did walk up,

Samples and Discontinued Styles of Furniture.

Close upon the heels of our great July Furniture Sale comes another occasion of the biggest value giving in our history. This is an unlooked-for event made possible by certain trade conditions pertaining to the periodical Furniture Exposition of the West. Exhibitors at the close of the Exposition prefer to sell their samples at a loss rather than ship them back to the factory-and our buyer, who has just returned, ever alive to your interests and ours, has secured at radical concessions the entire sample lines of several leading manufacturers.

The Samples are advanced patterns of the newest styles for the coming season's selling. The Discontinued Styles are most desirable and portray patterns that have been carried in regular stock, the manufacture of which has been discontinued. The grandest aggregation of Fine Furniture ever seen anywhere, at prices beyond
